Look at the resource below, where some people share their opinions about what makes a library.

A library should be an important part of a community. They are all about connecting people to information and being accessible to everyone so we can all learn. What makes a library is providing the tools and technology to do this. In the words of Albert Einstein, 'The only thing you absolutely have to know, is the location of a library.'

Can you think of any unique or different spaces that have been used as a library?

I think books, books and more books is what makes a library! I think its important that they add new titles and books frequently but other than that, I don't care. It could be a dark, dingy room or a bright, new building, as long as there are books!

What makes a library for you?

What really makes a library is the librarian! A good librarian has everything organised in a way that is easily accessible, they keep up with the times and they know their books. They can provide recommendations, keep you up to date and help you explore and enjoy even more books.

George

For me, it is important that a library has a quiet, clean and comfortable space for me to read and work. A computer and internet access is also important as I do not have a computer at home.
